HOW CHAN A SZ WAS BLESSED. "At the time of this incident Chan A Sz, a native of the Tseng perfecture, was in his 22d year. He was a market gardener by trade and a bachelor through the stress of poverty. One night he went out to keep watch in his melon garden. It was the third or fourth day of the fifth month, and there was a faint shimmer of light from the crescent moon. The light brought into view four or five shadowy forms that were strolling under the trees by the hillside. As they talked together in subdued tones A Sz thought within himself. The look of these men is A CHINESE GHOST STORY himself, 'The look of these men is scarcely that of melon stealers,' Clutching a hedge stake in his hand, he crept in among the thick foliage to con-ceal himsels as he watched their move "All at once he heard one man say:

"Let us go together into the melon gar den and have a whiff of the melon flowers and watch the little melons as they are rounding into form. What say the rest to the proposal?'
A companion replied: We must not go upon any consideration. Mischief will come of it. If we meet Chan A Sz, and he should be frightened to death, the adventure will be disastrous to all concerned. disastrous to all concerned.'

The rest laughed and said: 'Have you not already died and become a ghost' Do you suppose you might have to die over again?' As far as our experience goes it is men who stand in dread of ghosts. Who ever heard of ghosts being afraid of men? A chickenhearted kind of creature you are.'

"The ghosts who had remonstrated against this reckless saunter replied iff your courage is so great that you have no fear whatever of men, how is it that you never venture upon apparl.

day or two ago I went into the court in which the Guardian Spirit of the Ground presides, and happened to cast my eye upon a despatch from the King of Hades, giving a list of those whose souls were shortly to be required of them. Chan A Sz's name was on the list, and he will have to die within a couple of days. Before long he will be walking a companion with us in the Tartarian shades. What have I to fear, then, if this is already decreed?

"A ghost interposed: 'You only just begin to understand the speech and rudiments of ghost life. You know your A, but you do not know your B and your C. The man will not die yet awhile."

awhile."
"The other ghost chuckled and said."
"The other ghost chuckled and said."

How is it that you seem to be so far ahead of us in your information? You ahead of us in your information? You will perhaps explain yourself.'

"The ghost claiming superior knowledge answered: 'Well, I will tell you. As late as yesterday I also went into the court of the Guardian. Spirit of the Ground, to see the judge. A dispatch had just arrived from the Protecting Spirit of the city, saying that Chan A Sz's mother had recently performed a work of very high merit, and in recompense of that work it had been decreed that twelve years should be added to his hat twelve years should be added to his that twelve years should be added to his life.

'One of the ghosts asked: 'What was the nature of this particular act?'

'The speaker repiled: 'Within a few doors of Chan A Sz's house there lives a rich old lady who recently missed two strings of cash, and suspected her slave girl with having stolen them. Day after day she beat the girl, promising if she would only confess to the offence there should be nothing more said or done in the matter. If, however, she refused to confess, the mistress arowed she would not cease beating her till she had beaten her to death. The father of the slave girl heard of the affair and was very angry with his daughter. He declared that if it should be proved she were the culprit she should be thrown into the river and forfeit her place among the living. The poor slave girl sobbed with little intermission day and night, and every way of escape seemed closed against her. Because of this incident Chan A Sz's mother was overwhelmed with grief. There seemed to be no evidence to convict or exculpate the mother was overwhelmed with grief. There seemed to be no evidence to cowict or exculpate the girl, and it was all but certain that she would have to die. In pure pity the mother of this market gardener pawned her clothes and trinkets for about $2,000 cash. She took the cash to the rich old lady, and said: 'Several days ago I called here and found no one at home. I happened to see a hundred or more strings of cash heaped up on the floor. All at once the passion of covetousness sprang within me, and I helped myself to two strings, thinking that out of so many you would scarcely miss them. The loss arrested your attention and your suspicions fell on this slave girl. It could not be at peace, as you were beating her so terribly. It is probably because I neglected the improvement and cultivation of my character in some previous state of existence that I am condemned to poverry in the present previous state of existerice that I am condemned to poverry in the present life. To the score of wrong doing already recorded against me, shall I add this sin, which may need to be avenged in yet another life? I now restore the full tale of cash, and hope you will be magnanimous and forgive my misdemeanor." The rich lady answered: "Of course, I did not know that it was you who had taken the cash under these particular circumstances. under these particular circumstances. If you had been in straits there was nothing to prevent you from coming to me for a small loan. Since you have returned the cash and all is now cleared up, I shall cherish no ill-will. You need not brood over the matter for a moment."

moment."

"When the two had parted the God of the Furnace (who fills the office of recording saged) reported the meritorious act in Heaven and Yuk Wong reported it to the Protecting Spirit of the city. The Protecting Spirit of the city found, upon turning to his records, that, for the neglect of moral culture in a former life, Chan A Sz's mother was to have an only son, who would maintain washburn Guitar, from $25 have an only son, who would maintain ber till she was old and then die, leaving her desolate and solltary for the rest of her days. Bitter and intolerable destiny, it was decreed that Chan A Sz of her days. Bitter and intolerable destiny, it was decreed that Chan A Sz was to die in his 24th year, on the sixth day of the fifth month. But, since the accomplishment of this meritorious act, it had been determined that the life of the son should be lengthened out twelve years, so that he might be able to minister to his mother to the end of her days. You, brother ghost, did not know the affair from beginning to end. No wonder your spirits rose so high when you were anticipating the pleasure of Chan A Sz's company in the shades of Hades within a night or two.

"The other ghost laughed and said:

"Ah. who could of thought that the omens of destiny would change so entirely within a few short days? It is quite within a few short days? It is quite within the bounds of rational belief that Yama's edicts may be supplemented and revised, and that nothing of what has been written down it. what has been written down in the Book of Fate is entirety unalterable. "When Chan A Sz overheard these

"When Chan A Sz overheard these words he unconsciously heaved a deep sigh, and the troop of ghosts suddenly vanished. Fear on the one hand and joy on the other took possession of the young man's mind. All night long he revolved the incident, and came to the conclusion that good works could lengthen out a life to which no medicines could add a single span. A Sz had been filled with indignation when he first saw his mother take the two cines could add a single span. A Sz had been filled with indignation when he first saw his mother take the two strings of cash and give them to another, but upon hearing this conversation among the ghosts he came to see that the act was to save a fellow-creature, and all his indignation melted away. He also reflected within himself, if he had been origizally predestined to a very short life, and a virtuous act done by his mother could avail to lengthen out his life for an additional term, what plan could be adopted that would serve him at the end of the twelve years? 'My wisest course,' he thought, 'is to do some good act every day, and at the end of twelve years the sum of merit will not be inconsiderable. The great God may again add something to my life and if I go on in right paths my virtues will grow with my growing years, and I shall come to a ripe old age and have many sons and daughters. My family is poor, and almsgiving is impossible. I call to mind that no virtue is equal to that of filial piety. The supreme merit is attained by an obedient son.' It thus became his loy to minister to his mother in her declining life. She attained the age of 80 before she passed away. After this the market gardener married and had sons. To the very end he was zealous in all good works, and died after a tranquil To the very end he was zealous in all good works, and died after a tranquil and unclouded old age. —[Translated from the Chinese for the 8t Louis Globe Democrat.

have no fear whatever of men, how is it that you never venture upon apparitions under the broad light of noonday? "Quoth the other: 'It is petty and childish in you to contradict after this fashion. Although I may fear men in general, I have no fear about this particular man, Chan A Sz.'

"In reply to the other ghosts, who pressed him for the reason of his courage in this individual case, he said: 'A
